

Shakespearean Mix Up!!

Over the years, one of Shakespeare's most famous sonnets has been rewritten, but in the wrong order. Knowing what you now know about Shakespearean Sonnets (especially rhyme scheme, quatrains & couplets, etc), help the historians put the sonnet back together in the correct order! Good Luck!

SHAKESPEARE SONNET 50 Mixed-Up

- For that same groan doth put this in my mind:
- His rider loved not speed, being made from thee.
- How heavy do I journey on the way
- As if by some instinct the wretch did know
- The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
- More sharp to me than spurring to his side;
- My grief lies onward and my joy behind.
- Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
- That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide,
- When what I seek (my weary travel's end)
- "Thus far the miles are measured from thy friend."
- Plods dully on to bear that weight in me,
- Which heavily he answers with a groan,
- The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
